POSTAL REGULATORY COMMISSION

To whom it may concern:

I am writing to you to give input on the ten year plan proposed by Postmaster General DeJoy. To me, it seems as if his 10 year plan is designed to further slow the mail down, to offer less services, and to close postal offices throughout the country. With the prior changes to the mail, customers, including myself, have no idea how long it will take mail that they are sending to get to one place or another. I feel that the USPS should be striving to provide excellent services to the postal customers, not mediocre services to drive customers away.

I am retired and depend upon the Postal Service to provide exceptional service. I regularly use the USPS to send payments for bills and to mail greeting cards. In the past, I mailed these out five to seven days ahead. Now, I mail them out ten days ahead, in hopes of them arriving on time. As a senior, it is essential that I take my prescribed medications as ordered by my physician. Most of my medications are delivered via the USPS. Time is of the essence for prescription medications. One of my medications requires refrigeration except during a few days allowed for delivery. If my medication were delayed by mail slow downs, it could ruin a 90 day supply of medication. The time that it takes mail to get from one place to another is important to me in my daily life. I feel that proposed changes including ending the use of airplanes to deliver the mail, reducing hours of postal workers, ending six day a week delivery, and sub-contracting with private companies for the easiest or most lucrative facets of mail transport, are designed to slow down first class mail. This will affect me personally, and I object to these changes.

I go to my local postal office as needed for postal services, including mailing of packages, mailing larger or heavier than usual mail, and mailing items that need special delivery. Having visual problems that prevent me from driving, I feel fortunate that my local post office is within walking distance for me. It is very important for me that my local post office remain open. For other postal customers, closure of small postal offices in rural areas would be a great loss to such rural areas. These areas generally do not have local offices of UPS or Fed Ex as alternative services.

In summary, I am against the changes in the ten year plan proposed by Postmaster General DeJoy.

Thank you for considering my input.

Sincerely

Nancy L. Derexson
